The first thing I noticed when I stepped out of the car was the cold. It was a sharp contrast to the warm blanket of the car. I shivered slightly, but then I remembered that this was the first time I was going to see the doctor.
 I took a deep breath and walked towards the building. The door was open, and I saw a nurse standing there. She smiled at me and led me to the examination room. I sat down on the table, and the doctor came in.
 He looked at me and asked how I was feeling. I told him everything that had happened. He listened carefully and then he said, "Don't worry, everything will be fine." I felt a little better, but I still didn't know what to expect. The doctor then took out a small instrument and started to work.
 I closed my eyes and tried to relax. After a few minutes, he stopped and looked at me. "That's all," he said. "You're good to go." I stood up and felt a little shaky, but I was home again.
